Most save-the-dates are single paged programs or simple postcard invitations. Shaquana Williams wanted to share her wedding date and love story with her family and friends in a more memorable way. After looking online and rejecting traditional notifications like magnets and postcards, Shaq decided to print a save-the-date magazine instead.

We asked the couple about "The Proposal."
It was THE perfect proposal, we were on vacation for Drew's 30th birthday in St. Maarten. We had just come back from spending the day in St. Barthe and were headed to a romantic candle light dinner on the beach.

Drew replied, "I had it all laid out, private butler, 3 course meal, champagne and I had her there. I planned it all out as if it was for my birthday, half way through dinner I told her I had to run to the room because the special boat earlier didn't settle with me too well. It worked (i-ly) I came back with the ring in my pocket. I sat normally and we continued with dinner and conversations. The mood was exactly what I planned and imagined. The beach was dark and the only lights were the torches and candlelight. Towards the end of dinner, I opened the self-it box and that was it! The look on her face was priceless the feeling in my heart was unexplainable."

2. Tie in your wedding theme colors into your booklet.
3. Keep the font style consistent.
4. Make it personal.
5. Use our online designer to find the perfect templates and then just drag and drop your images into place!

Tye and Aisha included pages in their program that showed how they met, what their relationship was like, and where they hoped to go in the future. It was important for them to show their story to their guests during the wedding ceremony and also provide them with a fun keepsake.
